THE WINES OF SARDINIA

Could a diet of cheese, bread & wine be the secret to longevity?

For the people of Sardinia, it just might be, certain aspects of the Sardinian diet seem to make a difference, adding about six years to life expectancy.

For one thing, Sardinian people, of the Island located in the middle of the Mediterranean, drinks very dark red wine.

In life, there are few pleasures so pure as good wine.

Sardinia is a small island that God has blessed with the purest, finest wine and food.
For gourmets lovers a visit to this Paradise is a must.

Sardinia is home to 120 native grape varieties, about 40% of the amount of grapes varieties grown all over France.

TENUTE GEBELIAS

ARTISANS OF SARDINIA WINERY

Tenute Gebelias was born in the early years of the last century from the love, passion and work on the fields.
A work that is the result of the experience of several generations, passion for the land respecting and reflecting the traditions of Sardinian wine making.
The land is called “Gebel” that in Arabic means “mountain” and surrounding areas are famous for the important archaeological discoveries.
During the soil settlement for the planting of vineyard, several Askoid jugs have been found.
They were probably used to pour, sell and export wine,
which has been produced for ages on this land,
to all the Mediterranean sea.
Together with Mr Nicola Loddo, I worked on blending the wines, including my personalization of Gebel from native grapes Cannonau & Carignano and a small percentage of the winery terroir grown Cabernet Sauvignon.
For the labels I decide that a local Artist, such as Margaret Knott,
a wonderful charming lady, with tons of experience,
would have been the perfect person to give that extra colour to the wines.
She paints outside whenever she can, mostly with gouache, oil and graphite.
She prefers her fingers to a brush.
Her prints and paintings have been greatly influenced by her work as a designer. She has exhibited in Paris and New York and numerous UK Exhibitions.
Her painting can be found as well as on my wines
all over the walls of Artisans of Sardinia.
My House values of hospitality and quality of the food, can only be in the best bottle of quality and price of the wine list.

Principals' white grapes of Sardinia

Vermentino: a grape variety with ancient and mysterious origins

Vermentino is a semi-aromatic white grape variety also grown in Liguria where it takes on the name of Pigato, and in Piedmont and Corsica where it is known by the name of Favorita, but it is in Sardinia that it finds its ideal habitat. In the island of the ancient nuraghi, the cultivation of the vine from which you get the Vermentino of Sardinia began in the nineteenth century and initially affected only the area of Gallura but in a short time spread throughout the island. Theories try to explain the origin of Vermentino: a hypothesis is that the vine has made a journey spreading from Sardinia to other territories, while according to another theory, the Vermentino would have arrived on the island during the Arab domination. The name Vermentino seems to come from the word "vermena", a term now in disuse adopted especially during the Middle Ages to indicate a "young branch, thin and flexible", which derives from the Latin "verbena" regarding "herbs and twigs of evergreen plants".

Nuragus

Nuragus is a white Italian wine grape varieties that is grown in Sardinia. It is the principal variety between the DOC denomination wine Nuragus di Cagliari. The grape has a long history on the island with studies believing that the variety was likely introduced to the area by the Phoenicians. While the grape is still widely planted in Sardinia its numbers began to reduce in the late 20th century, falling by 50% during the 1980s alone to a total 8,700 hectares (21,500 acres) in 1990. Today it is mostly found in the southern part of the island between Cagliari and Oristano on the hot Campidano area.

Vernaccia

According to legend, Vernaccia was introduced to the island of Sardinia by the Phoenicians sometime after the ancient civilization founded the port of Tharros in 800 BC. The first documented mentioning of Vernaccia di Oristano was from a legal document drafted in 1327 in the town of Iglesias in southwest Sardinian that specified that winemakers were limited to producing one barrel each of wine made from several different grape varieties, including Vernaccia, Greco, Brusco Bianco and Vermiglio, but that each wine was to be kept separate. The name is derived from the Latin word vernaculus which means "native" or "indigenous" and would be attached to any grape perceived to be native to the local region. In the case of Vernaccia di Oristano, studies believe that the grape may be native to the Tirso River valley that crosses the island of Sardinia before emptying into the Gulf of Oristano.

Nasco

Among the typical vines of Sardinia there is certainly Nasco. According to some studies it would have originated in Greece and would have been brought to the island by the Phoenicians, but the hypothesis considered more valid, given the difficulties in reconstructing its origins, considers Nasco an ecotype, a variety that originated locally and, over time, has constantly adapted to the island environment. Nasco 'was among the most renowned wines that have contributed to making Sardinian wine production famous since ancient times ". It is widespread in the south and south-west of Sardinia, grown mainly in some municipalities in the provinces of Cagliari, Medio Campidano, Carbonia-Iglesias and Oristano. Various types of wine can be obtained from the "Nasco" vine, from dry white wines to sweet, passito, late harvest or fortified wines.

Principals' red grapes of Sardinia

Enological symbol of the Island: Cannonau

The Cannonau or Cannonao or even Garnacha in Spanish and Grenache in French, is the most ancient black grape in the Mediterranean and is commonly grown all over the island of Sardinia. Until a few years ago it was thought the Cannonau came from the Hibernian peninsula and brought to Sardinia during the Spanish invasion between XV and XVI centuries, however recent studies and the encounter of ancient grape seeds in some Archaeological sites including the nuragic village Duos Nuraghes in Borore, a municipality near Nuoro, have proven its an endemic cultivation. Excavations in 2020 at Borore have shed light on hundreds of grape seeds of carbonized vines dating back to 1200 BC, therefore about 3200 years ago the nuragic population had built gigantic Nuragic and already grew and produced the wine which was brought to Spain where it was renamed Canonazo in Sevilla and Garnacha in Aragona. Before recent archeological discoveries proving the plant was present and cultivated on the island by the nuragic civilization, the official story tells how the vine, originally from the Caucasus area and Mesopotamia, was brought through Anatolia, Egypt, Aegean islands and Greece and then to western Sardinia by the Phoenicians.

The Carignano grape

Early Italian wine writers speculated that Carignan, known as Carignano in several parts of Italy, was a Phoenician grape variety that was brought to the island of Sardinia by the Phoenician in the 9th century BC. From there the grape is believed to have spread to other Phoenician colonies, including the settlement at Sulcis, eventually being brought to the Italian mainland and carried around the western by the Ancient Romans. Here the grape developed in isolation to form distinct clones under the synonyms Bovale or Bovale Grande. At some point the grape reached Algeria where it became a high yielding "workhorse" variety that was widely exported to France to add colour and weight to French wine blends.

Bovale Sardo or Muristellu

The Bovale vine represents an example of the growing interest that is found for Sardinian native vines, among which certainly Carignano, Monica, Cagnulari, but also, and above all Bovale. In fact, since the 1970s, interest has been focusing on the huge amount of native Sardinian vines, and the grape that has been able to convince best over time is undoubtedly Bovale Sardo. Bovale is found in all wine-growing areas of Sardinia, but its area of choice is located on the lands of the Mandrolisai DOC, in the Nuoro area, and above all, in the Campidano di Terralba DOC area in the province of Oristano. Bovale is a vine that in the last years has been experiencing an exceptional evolution in terms of quality, passing from blended grapes or a little more to a variety with an excellent organoleptic profile. Many wineries are therefore starting to use Bovale both alone and as a shoulder for Cannonau or international vines. Bovale prefers hilly terrain where the temperature range is higher, but it also adapts to flat and marine areas, where the brackish air that lashes the vines, all year round makes it unique, giving wines of the highest quality. The main oenological characteristic of Bovale is that of having a very high polyphenolic charge, giving very dark and tannic wines that were once very difficult to drink due to the high alcohol content and low acidity, but which modern oenology is transforming into products of absolute interest.
